What is mental health nursing?

Mental Health Nursing is the specialty of nursing that cares for people of all ages with mental illness or mental distress, such as:

- ♦ schizophrenia
- ♦ bipolar disorder
- ♦ psychosis
- ♦ depression
- ♦ dementia

Nurses in this area receive additional training in:

- ♦ psychological therapies
- ♦ building a therapeutic relationship
- ♦ dealing with challenging behavior
- ♦ administration of psychotropic (psychiatric) medication

Using an interprofessional client-centered approach, mental health nurses work with psychiatrists, occupational therapists, general practitioners, social workers and other health professionals to plan and deliver care.

What do mental health nurses do?

At Providence Care's Mental Health Services site nurses activities include:

- ♦ assessing and caring for clients who are experiencing acute mental distress or have an enduring mental health disorder
- ♦ building therapeutic relationships with clients, families, and friends by listening to and interpreting their needs and concerns
- ♦ supporting clients to manage their emotions and behaviour
- ♦ educating families, friends, and clients' care providers on mental health disorders
- ♦ promoting a "recovery" based approach to care: "a journey of healing that builds on individual, family, cultural and community strengths, and enables people living with mental health problems and illnesses to lead meaningful lives in the community, despite any limitations imposed by their condition" (World Health Organization)

Are there standards of practice for mental health nursing?

- ♦ The College of Nurses of Ontario helps its members achieve high standards in a number of ways. For example, the College develops Practice Standards and Practice Guidelines that all nurses are expected to follow. Nurses are required to meet these standards of practice to provide safe and effective quality care to the public.
- ♦ The Canadian Federation of Mental Health Nurses developed The Canadian Psychiatric-Mental Health Nursing Practice Standards.
